

Camille Carroll is a scientist at South Florida Water Management District; she has been studying Florida plant communities since 1999, and recently started working in the lakes of Central Florida.